“ Wow this is a great place where I can always remember you and let the world know how much you meant to me Daddy. You were always my rock and always will be. I guess you can say I will always be a Daddys girl and I am proud of that fact. I know you are watching over me everyday, but as I get ready to have surgery I would do anything in this world to here your voice telling mw I will be fine. But I know in spirit you are here and always will be. Thank you my dear daughter Heather for telling me about this site. It warms my heart. Thanks to everyone who has taken the time to post on this site. I will always remember you for remembering my very special Dad. Love you and miss you everyday.

“ as it nears the two years you have been gone people say it gets easier but im finding that hard to believe as does everybody that loses somebody close to them. your memory is like a fire burning bright and strong in my heart and mind..they will never fade or go away. the momories im left with are all the things i have to remember you by..like you constantly telling Travis if he didnt eat supper you would hang him by his toes, the whole walkie talkie thing that you said was impossible to fix, yet all it took was sticking a tooth pick in the mic hole to get the mud out, all the way to you holding Rhyan for the first time Christmas 2010 right before you left this world to go home to our eternal father..you left so many things in this world that always reminds me of you, all of your iron work and construction from Philly to Jackson and even on the coast..nobody knows the connection i have with those simple things and nobody will understand the flutters in my chest and stomach when i see those things and think 'yep my granddaddy help build that' i love you and miss you unconditionally..you are a true insperation to me and im so glad i am lucky to call you my Granddaddy..thank you for everything you done because im going to work hard everyday to show you in heaven that im honored to be your granddaughter..

your gone but NEVER forgotten
