“ Scottie was a man you didn't have to know long to feel like you were a life-long friend; and had the kind of giving heart that led him to spend weeks far away from home to help a bunch of strangers. In our few meetings, Scottie spoke often of his love of family, and had a giant grin when talking about his daughter in college. His sense of humor was contagious, and it still makes me laugh recalling his recount of a family drive to New York City. But most importantly, Scottie was a man of faith. He's now with the Lord, free from all pain and suffering. God bless the family, and take comfort that you'll see him again in glory.
